The conference was held at the University of Milan, from 26 to 28, in the “Sala Napoleonica” of Palazzo Greppi. During the event, I had a great opportunity to get familiar with the researchers work from many places. Within two days, lectures and posters were presented in various sections, covering a significant part of modern geomorphological science. I was able to present my poster in one of the sections: “Rock-surface dating of slope sediments in Baksan valley (Central Caucasus)”. It was extremely interesting to discuss luminescence dating of various geomorphological processes and sediments with people from different fields and find new perspectives and ideas for my future work. I was also impressed by the scatter of the research areas of the participants – participants held their study all over the world, from Russia to Costa Rica. I sincerely hope that the next conferences will stay in the same international setting.

In the evening, at the end of the lectures, we were asked to orally present our posters for 2 minutes, which I find very useful. Also, I think it would be great to allow speakers to show some figures and pictures on the screen in the future.

A dinner (Apericena) was also organized at the end of the first day of the conference, which helped us to get to know the participants better and discuss ideas that arose during the day.

The conference continued on the 27th with oral presentations and discussion of posters.

I would like to thank ALGeo for the opportunity to visit Italy and the University of Milan for the first time and join the international research team for these two days, as well as the organizers of the conference for their help during the event.
